Congressman Says

ON April 22.—The representative swing, representing California, is threatening to demand a railroad loan connecting with lands in the Imperial Valley, and in Arizona purposes will be in the issue early next day.

Representative swing announced conferences with delegations from California, rather than measures had resulted from the recommendations of the recommendations Davis of the service.

It was said it was possible to obtain originally permission of the sum requested to $15,000,000 of the canal previous to $15,000,000 would have been given to the project, and also wanted to give former service mental claims on the lands which will be irrigated.

Those were the days when there was romance in moonshining and the best authors wrote novels around the moonshiner on his lonely mountain trail.

Judge Cochran has found them to be square men, being Kentuckians.

There have been occasions, he says, when to go to prison immediately to interrupt the moonshiner's spring planting of his harvested thus causing distress to his family which depended on the crop for its livelihood.

So Judge Cochran has permitted the prisoner to go home on bond, in planting or his harvested, and then come back to begin serving his sentence.

And no Kentucky moonshiner ever has failed him.

It is estimated by Kentuckians that in a city like Chicago more moonshine is produced in a week than was produced in the Kentucky mountains in a year in the old days.

Judge Cochran believes the Volstead law does not treat moonshiners rough enough.

He points out that under the old revenue laws he could send a moonshiner to the penitentiary. Now the worst he can do with one under the Volstead law is to send him to jail for six months and fine him.

MOONSHINE JUDGE TELLS HIS IMPRESSIONS OF PROHIBITION

BY ALFRED SEGAL

CINCINNATI, Ohio, April 22.—Reading the newspapers, Judge A. M. J. Cochran, of the federal district court of eastern Kentucky, learns these days that police are smashing moonshine stills in transient houses of the cities. But thousand-gallon stills are being uncovered in tiny attics, that moonshiners peddle their stuff on the crowded highways of the great centers of civilization; that men steal or go deaf from the poison distilled by the city moonshiners.

When he reads these things his heart shudders for his state, which has been much maligned as the home of moonshiners where the moonshiner distiller battled the revenue.

So he says:

Kentucky no longer is the moonshine state. Its name has changed.

He lives in Cincinnati where conducting court in Covington, Ky., a seat of his district opposite Cincinnati; long ago he qualified as the nation's leading authority on moonshining and their ways.

When moonshine still was being preached only in churches, Cochran was sending moonshiners to the penitentiary.

In 20 years he estimates he has fined or sentenced to prison 15,000 moonshiners and bootleggers.

On occasion 21 moonshiners were taken to prison from my court, so some special care was needed to haul them all.

Those were the days when there was romance in moonshining and the best authors wrote novels around the moonshiner on his lonely mountain trail.

Diver Battles Giant Devilfish 50 Feet Below Water and Finally Escapes When Nearly Exhausted

TACOMA, Wash., April 22.—Battling for his life fifty feet beneath the surface of Puget Sound, Walter McRae, a diver known in marine circles from Alaska to California, came out victorious yesterday after a giant devilfish.

The monster wrung its tentacles so tightly about McRae that the diver was unable to reach the knife he carried for protection. When out tentacles threatened to cut off the air supply, McRae, through the submarine telephone, called for a short steel wrecking bar. With this weapon the diver was able to pierce the devilfish and at last with man and monster still struggling desperately, McRae was driven to the surface by the diver's assistant and other men called to help.

While Richard Hartnett, a diving swimmer, stood by with drawn pistol unable to shoot because the diver and devilfish were in closely tangled, others attacked with what weapons there were at hand and at last the devilfish surrendered to the water.

The devilfish was one of the largest ever seen in these waters and was the first, McRae said, that ever attacked him.

McRae, who suffered chiefly from exhaustion, was prepared to come along today.

The French contend that the Germans, under their reply, may break upon the Russo-German note.

French Foreign Minister, the Foreign Minister, said that he would not accept the German note.
